Report -Mon June 2 - Timothy Tsui - How pleasure and Work relate

Timothy Tsui gave an inspiring talk about his life-long career as an artist, beginning with pencil sketches at the age of 5. Later this was in parallel with his high stress work as a medical scientist which he described in detail. Through the years he has used pastel, charcoal, watercolour and oil. Much of his work continues to be realistic, but some later abstract paintings were inspired by the observation and photography of colourful stained pathology specimens under the microscope. Some patterns seen in biological tissues can be as interesting as the works of Fred Williams. The hospitals within Southern Health have built up a large significant collection of contemporary art. Recently a curator has been appointed. It is now recognised that beautiful art can assist both patients and staff through difficult times. The picture shows Timothy and Marie, our Convenor, with the exhibits.
